Science International is the first history of a worldwide organization of scientists, now involving thousands of participants, which was started a century ago when a few visionaries founded the International Association of Academies (1899-1919).

The study programme “International Health Sciences” provided by the Fulda University of Applied Science is the first basic study course in Germany addressing the health challenges in the globalised world, now providing an opportunity to complete undergraduate studies with a focus on international or global health in this country.

Designed to meet the needs and interests of international exchange students who prefer to study in English, the program is composed of lectures from our regular degree programs, as well as complementary studies that are unique to this program.
