A Zen garden is a Japanese or Chinese style garden created to be your own sacred area. This can be a space for meditation, reflection or socializing – such as a pavilion, teahouse or comfortable seating area. While it's important to use traditional elements of a Zen garden, it's also important that you personalize yours. Traditionally, Zen gardens incorporate the elements of Yin and Yang ...

The Japanese rock garden or “dry landscape” garden, often called a zen garden, creates a miniature stylized landscape through carefully composed arrangements of rocks, water features, moss, pruned trees and bushes, and uses gravel or sand that is raked to represent ripples in water.

Place a wall inside the footprint of the garden in order to enclose a lounge space, creating the sense of an outdoor room. Here, a 12-foot-long slate walls is a great backdrop for the bench, picking up the hues in the stone beds and fencing in other parts of the garden.

Zen in Sanskrit or Mandarin dialect means ‘meditative state’, and a zen garden will really make your relax and reflect a little. Such a place is very calm and you can easily design it in your own garden just realizing some features.

A zen inspired design is all about natural colours, in soft tones, such as white, grey, shades of beige or pink beige, which have the power to induce a sense of relaxation and calmness. Chromatic harmony between the various elements is very important, as well as the visual continuity between walls, furniture and floors.
